By following these steps on how to put on a condom, you will be in the best position to ensure that you make the best use of condoms each time you are involved with a sexual encounter.

Always use a condom when you are involved in a sexual encounter. You need to remember that semen can pass to you partner even before you fully ejaculate.

When opening the condom wrapper take care not to poke a hole in the condom. Obviously, a hole or a tear in a condom defeats its purpose.

You need to put the condom onto your penis when it becomes erect and before you engage in any sexual contact with your partner. Again, you need to understand that fluids can leave the penis even prior to a full or complete ejaculation.

Prior to actually putting on the condom, hold the tip of the condom itself and squeeze our air at the end of the condom to leave room for semen. Take care when you put on the condom so that you do not tear it.

If you happen to be uncircumcised pull the loose skin away from the head of your penis prior to putting on the condom

Holding onto the tip of the condom, unroll it down the length of your penis. Once again, you need to be careful not to tear or puncture the condom in this process.

After you have ejaculated, hold onto the condom at the base of your penis.

While holding onto the condom, withdraw from your sexual partner while your penis is still erect. Slowly withdraw so as not to spill semen from the condom.

Remove the condom slowly.

Make sure you wash your hands after you handled a used condom and before you have any further contact with your partner.
